Tarbox named Presidential Scholar

Mechelle Tarbox, a recent Model Secondary School for the Deaf graduate, has been named a Presidential Scholar in recognition of her talents and accomplishments as an actor. She is the first MSSD student—and believed to be the first deaf person—to earn this honor.

On June 21, Tarbox will perform at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, and on June 23 she will receive her award from President Bill Clinton.

By now, Tarbox must be starting to get used to breaking barriers. This winter, she became the first deaf actor to win top honors in the prestigious Arts Recognition and Talents Search (ARTS) acting competition for high school students. As a student selected from 150 ARTS finalists for the top of three levels of placement, Tarbox won a scholarship award of $3,000 and a nomination as a Presidential Scholar.

Although other MSSD students have been finalists or received honorable mentions in past ARTS competitions, Tarbox is the first to become a Presidential Scholar, according to Tim McCarty, coordinator of Theatre Production at MSSD.

Most Presidential Scholars are recognized for academic accomplishments. Up to 121 high school seniors nationwide are chosen from a field of about 2,500 semifinalists who earn a high score on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) or the American College Test (ACT). In addition, up to 20 students are recognized for excellence in the arts as identified through the national ARTS program competitions for actors, dancers, musicians, visual artists, and writers.

Tarbox has been affected profoundly by the newest honor. "It increased my confidence in my deafness," she said. "Before, I was worried that I'd be rejected from jobs because of my deafness, but now the Presidential Scholars program recognizes deaf people can do it. I feel more that I can do anything—there are no limits."

"I'd like to break [down] the wall . . . make hearing people more open minded about deaf people—not just for myself, but for others." For her performance at the Kennedy Center, Tarbox is wavering between a selection from "Miss Julie," a play about an insane, dominant woman, and a selection from "Juvie," about an apathetic teenage drug addict.

Thinking back to the selection process for the Presidential Scholar honors, Tarbox asserted that it wasn't fair to expect deaf competitors to have English skills as good as those of hearing competitors because "deaf and hearing people have different languages." ARTS Presidential Scholars nominees had to write essays to be considered for this honor. "The essay had to have perfect grammar. I doubted I could do it—I got someone to help me, but I was still doubtful. I was happy that they recognized that deaf people have a language. We're smart, yes, but not good at English."

As remarkable as her accomplishments may be, Tarbox's talents were not always so obvious. When McCarty first met Tarbox, he said, "I thought, 'There's no hope for the kid.' She had great enthusiasm but no control." Tarbox, however, had a stubborn streak. She kept working on her acting skills. "Like magic, she changed," McCarty said. "Something happened inside. Something clicked. Now the foundation is laid. It'll be interesting to see where she goes from here."

MSSD awards 96 diplomas June 5

Ninety six graduates—making up one of the largest graduating classes in the 23-year history of commencements at the Model Secondary School for the Deaf—received diplomas at a June 5 commencement ceremony in the Field House.

It is perhaps reflective of MSSD students' pride in American Sign Language that the three key speeches at their graduation reflected the picturesque power of ASL.

The speeches were given by Mary Beth Miller, a deaf actress; Mechelle Tarbox, the class salutatorian, who is also an actress; and Joseph Josselyn, the class valedictorian.

Miller, who has acted in "Children of a Lesser God" and in National Theatre of the Deaf productions, confided to her audience that she felt strange giving a speech instead of performing. "It's not easy!" she said. She proceeded to demonstrate just how true that statement was by using one of her hands to represent her desire to perform and her other hand to represent her sense of duty to the task of giving a proper speech.

"I want to perform!" said her left hand.

"Pay attention! This is graduation!" her right hand admonished.

"Are some of you scared? I was too," she said, joking that she had

KDES special athletes go for the gold

Each spring, when most students look forward to the laid-back days of summer, one group of Kendall Demonstration Elementary School students gears up for their biggest event of the year, the Special Olympics. Once again, Gallaudet hosted the event, the 25th Annual District of Columbia Special Olympics Summer Games, on May 27-29.

"When the kids first walk into the school in September, they're asking me, 'Are we going to run?' meaning the Special Olympics," said Phyllis Ballenger, an instructor in the KDES Special Opportunities Program and coordinator for the school's Special Olympics athletes.

But running is not all these students do. This year, KDES's 31 Special Olympians, ranging in age from 10 to 14, participated with more than 1,000 others ages 8 to 65 in track and field, volleyball, swimming, gymnastics, and, for the first time, golf.

Kendall's volleyball team won the gold this year as did the swimmers in the 100-meter relay. Shakemia Jenkins also won a gold medal as an all-around gymnast.

About 1,100 volunteers from the metropolitan area helped plan and staff the event. More than 2,000 area law enforcement officers, including officers from Gallaudet's Department of Safety and Security, participated in the Eighth Annual Law Enforcement Torch Run to open the games and to raise funds and awareness for the games.

Gallaudet has hosted the D.C. Special Olympics since its inception in 1969. "I can't say enough about the support of the University throughout the event," said James Schumtz, director of sports and coach's education for D.C. Special Olympics.

The Special Olympics began in the early 1960s at Soldier Field in Chicago, Ill., with 1,000 athletes taking part in the games. Today, more than one million children and adults with mental retardation participate in Special Olympics Programs worldwide.

Champions pause for an on-camera interview as they leave the winner's platform at the 25th Annual D.C. Special Olympics Summer Games, held at Gallaudet May 27-29.

been unable to hold back her tears at her own graduation from the Kentucky School for the Deaf in 1961.

"Now you have more responsibility," Miller said, observing that the 70 percent of the graduating class who will enroll in postsecondary educational programs this fall—many at Gallaudet—will need to remember to do their own homework, while those who get jobs "will have a responsibility to the workplace."

Miller encouraged students to be active in the deaf community, to support ASL, and fight for their rights as individuals.

She closed her speech with a performance, telling a story of a group of old men who try, and fail, to blow out a candle. A woman comes to the rescue, snuffing out the candle with her moistened fingers.

Tarbox gave the salutatorian presentation—an ASL poem about the growth experienced by MSSD students as they move through their four years of high school. The freshman year is a nervous and confusing one, Tarbox reflected, but by the senior year anxiety has diminished and is replaced by knowledge.

Josselyn gave an address that, like Miller's, was half speech and half performance. He used ASL to demonstrate various ways in which people manifest their talents. But talent is not enough, he said; determination is important too. "Flying is not easy. You must go through storms and waves, the difficulties of life. Don't give up. Keep flying."

Students with high grade point averages (GPA) were recognized during the ceremony. Three Gold Eagles—Josselyn, Tarbox, and a hearing American Field Service exchange student, Janelle Jung—earned a GPA of 3.75 or above, and 22 Silver Eagles earned a GPA between 3.25 and 3.75.

The class of 1992 established a scholarship fund last year to support a graduating student in the class of 1993; the award was given to Maureen Yates.

The Peter B. Hobbs Memorial award for school spirit was given to Carla Shird.

Diplomas were awarded by Vice President for Pre-College Programs Harvey Corson.

Christopher Robert Zelnio, the last student to receive a degree, dragged himself across the stage like a man crossing the desert to reach an oasis. "My diploma!" he exclaimed, adding, "Long live the class of 1993!"

Announcements

The Department of Sign Communication is offering a lab in July and August for staff members who wish to brush up on their sign skills. The labs will be on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 2:30-4 p.m., beginning July 1. For more information and to register, E-mail ADSUTCLIFFE.

Deaf and hard of hearing people are needed to participate in a brief memory experiment that is being conducted by the Gallaudet Research Institute. For information, call Paula Tucker, x6467, or E-mail 11PTUCKER.

The University Library is searching for copies of the daily bulletin that was published during the British Deaf Association Centenary Congress held Aug. 8-14, 1990, in Brighton, England. The congress may have been titled "Out of the Shell." If anyone has copies of the bulletin that they would be willing to donate or allow the Library to photocopy, contact Marilyn Estes, acquisitions librarian, x5225.

The District of Columbia Library has appointed Janice Rosen as the new librarian for the deaf community, replacing Alice Hagemeyer, who retired in December 1991. Rosen has served as coordinator of the Literacy for the Deaf Project since October 1990 and is a recent graduate of the Library School of Catholic University. In addition to her duties of promoting library resources for the deaf community and heightening awareness of communication needs and accomplishments of the local deaf community, Rosen will continue as coordinator for the literacy project.

Among Ourselves

Dr. Robert Davila has been named headmaster of the New York School for the Deaf, White Plains, N.Y. Davila served as assistant secretary for the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services in the U.S. Department of Education during the administration of former President George Bush, and was formerly vice president for Pre-College Programs at Gallaudet.

Karen Peltz Strauss, senior staff attorney for the National Center for Law and Deafness, was awarded the Latham Breunig Humanitarian Award by Telecommunications for the Deaf, Inc. (TDI) June 4 at its 10th biennial convention in Anchorage, Alaska. Strauss received the award for her legal counsel on telecommunications issues affecting the deaf and hard of hearing community.
